LABOR COMMISSION ON GENERAL RENTALS

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION

FOR THE YEAR 1954
GENERAL RENTALS IN THE UNITED STATES

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Commission has conducted a study of the general rental market in the United States during the year 1954. The study was based on a survey of the rental market in the major cities of the United States. The results of the survey are summarized in this report.

The general rental market in the United States during 1954 was characterized by a continued upward trend in rental rates. This trend was the result of a number of factors, including a shortage of rental housing, a general increase in the cost of construction materials, and a steady increase in the cost of living.

The shortage of rental housing was the most significant factor in the increase in rental rates. The demand for rental housing has continued to grow rapidly, and the supply of rental housing has failed to keep pace with this demand. This shortage has led to a general increase in rental rates throughout the country.

In addition to the shortage of rental housing, the general increase in the cost of construction materials has also contributed to the increase in rental rates. The cost of materials such as lumber, brick, and concrete has risen sharply, and this has led to a corresponding increase in the cost of new rental housing.

Finally, the steady increase in the cost of living has also contributed to the increase in rental rates. As the cost of living has risen, tenants have been forced to pay higher rents in order to maintain their standard of living.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Commission believes that the general rental market in the United States is in a state of disequilibrium. The shortage of rental housing and the general increase in the cost of construction materials and the cost of living have led to a general increase in rental rates. This increase in rental rates has placed a heavy burden on tenants and has led to a general decline in the standard of living.

The Commission recommends that the Federal Government take steps to correct this disequilibrium. The first step should be to increase the supply of rental housing. This can be done by providing financial assistance to the construction of new rental housing. The second step should be to control the cost of construction materials. This can be done by imposing price controls on these materials. The third step should be to control the cost of living. This can be done by imposing price controls on essential commodities.
